Care Connect Washington is a program developed early in the pandemic to provide food and other support to people with COVID-19 so they could isolate at home. Now the program is helping meet the longer-term needs of people who have been affected by COVID-19. For example, some people experience long-term side effects from COVID-19. Other people may have been sick and lost their job and need help getting back on their feet. Care Connect Washington can help.

Care Connect Washington is a partnership between the Department of Health, nine regional hubs, and more than 100 local care coordinators in communities across the state. The Care Connect system strengthens communities by helping people achieve stability and better health. Local care coordinators work with a person to help them apply for programs such as unemployment benefits, subsidized housing or child care, food assistance programs such as SNAP or WIC, Apple Health, and more. Care Connect provides the information people need in their preferred language.
